SCHOOL REPORT.

THE most indispensable requisite in order that a township may have good schools, is that those scholars who attend at all should be present regularly. The practice which is so common in this and other towns, of sending scholars for two, or at most three months only each year, may be necessary, but if so, it is a necessary evil. It defeats all endeavors to systematize instruction, substitutes confusion for classification, makes the grading of schools well nigh an impossibility, and the degrading of them almost a dead certainty.

A second necessity is a corps of efficient teachers. There is as much scope for enterprise in teaching as there is in any other business or profession. There is as little use in the school-room for mere figure-heads, as in any place we could point out. Success here depends as much upon the teacher's ability to keep the school under his or her hand, and upon the power, if necessary, in an emergency to "invent gunpowder," as upon a knowledge of the Rule of Three or the analysis of sentences,—in short, skill to manage is as needful as a well stored mind. And though no preliminary examination can detect a fatal lack of the executive talent, yet the want of it insures failure.

On the other hand, a nice discrimination and an accuracy in little things are absolutely essential to the perfect teacher. To know is to discriminate; and, since all the processes of teaching require the distinguishing of little differences, all slipshod scholarship, in the person of the teacher, should be voted out of the school-room. The master or mistress, considered as a teacher simply, is wholly employed in the business of carefully imparting little facts to the pupil. Slight mistakes and vulgarisms suffered to pass uncorrected in the Primary department, will vitiate the whole education. The foundations must be securely laid and well jointed, or the superstructure will be a mass of higgledy-piggledy.

But teachers with skill enough to sway, and accuracy sufficient to be clear-headed and sure, must be liberally paid; and it should be demanded of the committee that they furnish all our schools with the best kind of teachers, whatever may be the expense, and, however, in consequence, the policy may contract the school year. For the services of a sure-footed guide for one hour, are better than the aid of a stumbler for ten.

By vote of the Legislature, the ancient chaos was disturbed in this and other towns at the beginning of the last year, and the transition from the old district system to the new municipal system, has not been favorable to the production of the best educational results. The 'inconveniences chargeable to this source, however, are not likely to have much influence the coming year, if the people of the town will co-operate with the committee and aid them in doing what may easily be done, to raise the educational interest to what it should be.

With certain improvements, which it is hoped will be easily attainable, such as the retention of good teachers for longer periods than it was found practicable the past year to retain some of them, there is good reason to expect a decided advance in the standing of our schools. At least, this has been generally the case where the present system has been fairly tried.

There have been several very good schools in town since the time of the last Annual Report. As an example may be instanced that taught by Miss Henshaw, at the Depot Village.

We name this, not to institute an invidious comparison, but because in it the qualities of precision, finish and orderliness were especially manifest. Various commendations might be fairly given to other schools, but we omit further specifications.

In our judgment it would be wise action for the town to "change the base" of two or three of the school-houses, and to set them so that the inmates of two or three small bunches of dwellings can be accommodated in one building. This plan would, perhaps, make the distance to be travelled greater for a few, but by it more of the schools would be made respectable in point of numbers, and no ill-feeling could ever arise because any school was too short. If a school is kept up in each of the sections where they have hitherto been kept, several of them must either be very short or great injustice must be done. The Assessors report to us the number of children, between five and fifteen, in three of the former districts, at 157, 159, and 222 respectively. In three other districts they report the number of scholars of the same ages to be 5, 7, and 10. Another still had 10, and still another 11. The specified ages are those which our appropriations for common schools mainly contemplate. Now but three schools are established for the benefit of each of the three largest numbers specified. Dividing the very largest number by 3, and it gives 74 scholars for each school. Dividing the two next largest numbers by 3, and the quotients are 52 and 53—the number to be accommodated by each school, if they choose to go. In those sections where there are five, seven, ten, eleven or fifteen (actual cases each), a teacher must be hired at the same price (or at a price so nearly the same as not to vitiate the argument at all) which is paid for a teacher of the schools which must accommodate 74 or 52 scholars. The fuel will cost the same for the small school as for the large one. And the demand is that the small school be kept in session as long as the large one, so that each scholar in town may have as much schooling as any other.

Now where, we ask, is the justice in the town's paying as much to school five scholars as it pays to school fifty, or even for fifteen scholars as for thirty? A partial remedy at least for the troubles arising on this score is to be found in having one school-house in certain cases where now there are two.

We are called upon in this report to mention with affectionate respect the memory of Gamaliel Collins, Esq., who, at the time of his death, a few months since, was our colleague, who has often in the past served the town in various capacities, and who for several recent years has acted as a member of the committee on schools.

The vacancy in the board caused by his death was filled by the election of Miss C. M. Hills, for the remainder of Mr. Collins's term, which expires with the year 1869-70.

With a reasonable appropriation of money, and the aid in all practicable ways of the voters of the town, the committee who shall serve you the coming year ought to score many points of real advance before the time of the next report.

Respectfully submitted,
